

More information on Lamberton

The hamlet of Lamberton is the most easterly of the 3 parishes and comprises a mix of traditional smallholdings, some of which are still farmed, and newer modern houses built in recent years.

There are about 50 residences and because numbers have been allocated as and when things were built it is notoriously confusing for delivery drivers with consecutively numbered addresses sometimes a mile apart with a variety of others in between.

Directions rely more on location along the old A1 with Lamberton Shiels at the north end, the road up past the Whales Jaws at the south end and mid way along, the road up to Lamberton Moor towards Mordington. With its location so close to the sea, many of the houses in Lamberton have spectacular coastal views.

Lamberton Hall is located up the Whales Jaws adjacent to Old Lamberton Church and Graveyard. The Hall, Church and Graveyard are held in Trust and managed by the Hall Committee. Committee records date back to the 1920s and provide an interesting insight into the history of the Hall which was originally a cottage and altered into a Hall for use by the smallholders.

The Hall has been regularly used since that time and continues to be an important community facility. Renovations were undertaken in 2009 to improve the basic fabric of the building whilst retaining its historical character.

The Church and Graveyard are in ruins but being of historical importance are protected by designation as a Scheduled Monument and Category B listing by Historic Scotland.
